ABOUT THE TRAINING:

In today's multi-generational workplace, many new and challenging obstacles have arisen. None more so than those associated with the youngest members of our workforce, the Millennials.

By taking a look at this generation in more detail, we can better understand what makes a Millennial "click." How do they view the workplace? Why do they act the way they do at work? How can we best utilize their unique attitudes and perspectives to strengthen our organization?

Focusing on the soon-to-be largest cohort of employees in America, we can start working on managing Millennials in relation to other generations and effectively utilizing these potential game changers.

ABOUT THE PRESENTER:

Scott McAtee is a member of the University of Nebraska HR team and an established corporate trainer and organizational coach. Using personal experiences and real-world examples, Scott encourages the audience to examine day-to-day life in an engaging and entertaining way. With a Master's degree in Industrial/Organizational Psychology, Scott has a unique perspective in how individuals react to the companies that employ them.
