Critical Thinking in the Workplace

Because the quality of our thinking affects the quality of our lives, critical thinking is integral to all that we do.

This session examines the role of critical thinking at work and ways in which we can develop our own critical thinking skills as well as foster the critical thinking of others. Together we will explore questioning techniques and frameworks for sound reasoning, spotlight fallacies and other obstacles, and build our skills to become more confident in the choices and decisions we make.

PRESENTER: TERRI DEEMS, PH.D.

Terri is a program designer, trainer, coach and consultant in the areas of personal and organizational change, development and transformation. She has worked with diverse industries including higher education, financial, insurance, healthcare, manufacturing, publishing, government and nonprofit organizations. She has a passion for helping others create a vision, establish objectives, critically examine their actions and habits, and implement behavior change to 'get unstuck' and achieve their goals.
